Our Social Responsibility

Breaking with the traditional model of luxury train rides anchored in the past and isolated from the places they travel through, at Tren Ecuador we created our own model of social co-responsibility in the operation of our tours, in which local communities and natural heritage are at the heart of the experience.

Together with the license-holders of our 23 station-cafés, 14 artisanal squares, 13 local museums, 2 lodges, 9 folklore and historical recreation groups and several community-based tourism operations, Tren Ecuador’s big family of workers and strategic allies allows tourists to experience first-hand the rich natural and cultural heritage of Ecuador while creating value for local communities.

This network of TrenEcuador – associated enterprises creates and maintains more than 5000 jobs in local communities along the tracks. Operators of Tren Ecuador-associated facilities are carefully selected within the communities, and they receive technical support, training and fixed contracts compliant with fair-trade principles as suppliers for Tren Crucero or Expediciones. They also serve their communities as fully-licensed tourism companies.

We are fully committed to the principles of Sustainable Tourism and the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism. All our managerial and promotional decisions are made ensuring that we contribute to the strengthening of local economies by sustainable use of the heritage associated to the historic railway we operate.

The involvement of local communities and their leading role in the product is the real innovation in this business model in which public, private and community-based actors are partnered as equals with a common goal, which is to create value by preserving and sharing the material and intangible heritage associated to the railway.

When you travel with us, grab a bite at Café del Tren or buy a souvenir in our Artisans’ Plaza, you are not just supporting local economies; you also become part of this dream come true. Thank you!

Ecuadorian cuisine is as diverse as its ecosystems.

The warm climate of the Andean valleys accounts for a large variety of crops: greens, potatoes, legumes, corn, quinoa... Their flowers color the fields with their brilliant hues and their produce enrich the restaurant tables along the tracks. Down in the coast, the sweetest fruits are harvested, along with rice, sugar cane, the best cocoa bean in the world and a large assortment of fish and seafood.

Once “Alfaro’s Railway” started operating back in early XXth century, previously isolated coast and highland regions in Ecuador got unimaginably closer, and a lively exchange of ideas, practices and, most importantly, produce, began. In this hustle and bustle, railway stations became the meeting point of people, news and trade.

Nowadays, with the train travelling at a more leisurely pace, the 24 Cafes del Tren operating in restored railway stations along the tracks still serve the same purpose as connection between tourists and the local communities they are visiting.

Operated by local entrepreneurs, they offer the best of their local gastronomy with a touch of modern cuisine that turns even the most humble traditional dish into a culinary experience.

Whether on a family outing, a business lunch or a corporate event, our Café del Tren network offers traditional recipes with the best ingredients, lovingly prepared by our licence-holders, who have been carefully selected and trained to be an important part of Tren Ecuador experiences.

When you eat at Café del Tren, or hire them for your events, you are not just supporting local economies; you are also becoming part of the preservation of our cultural heritage through its deepest expression: Food.
